Bath Six Bridges Walk

A popular 18th century walk, full of variety.
Explore both the heritage and wildlife of Bath.

Route Description: Bath – Newbridge to Windsor Bridge

1 Meet the path on Newbridge, built in 1736 to replace a ford. Go down the steep steps beside the bridge near The Boat House Inn and the Newbridge Park & Ride. At dusk, look out for horseshoe bats.

Lyambata

3 Hear birdsong alongside the sounds of road and railway on this wooded stretch of the Avon. Stop to admire the bench marking Emperor Haile Selassie 1 of Ethiopia's use of the path while exiled in Bath, 1936–41. Look out for otters.

Drew Avery

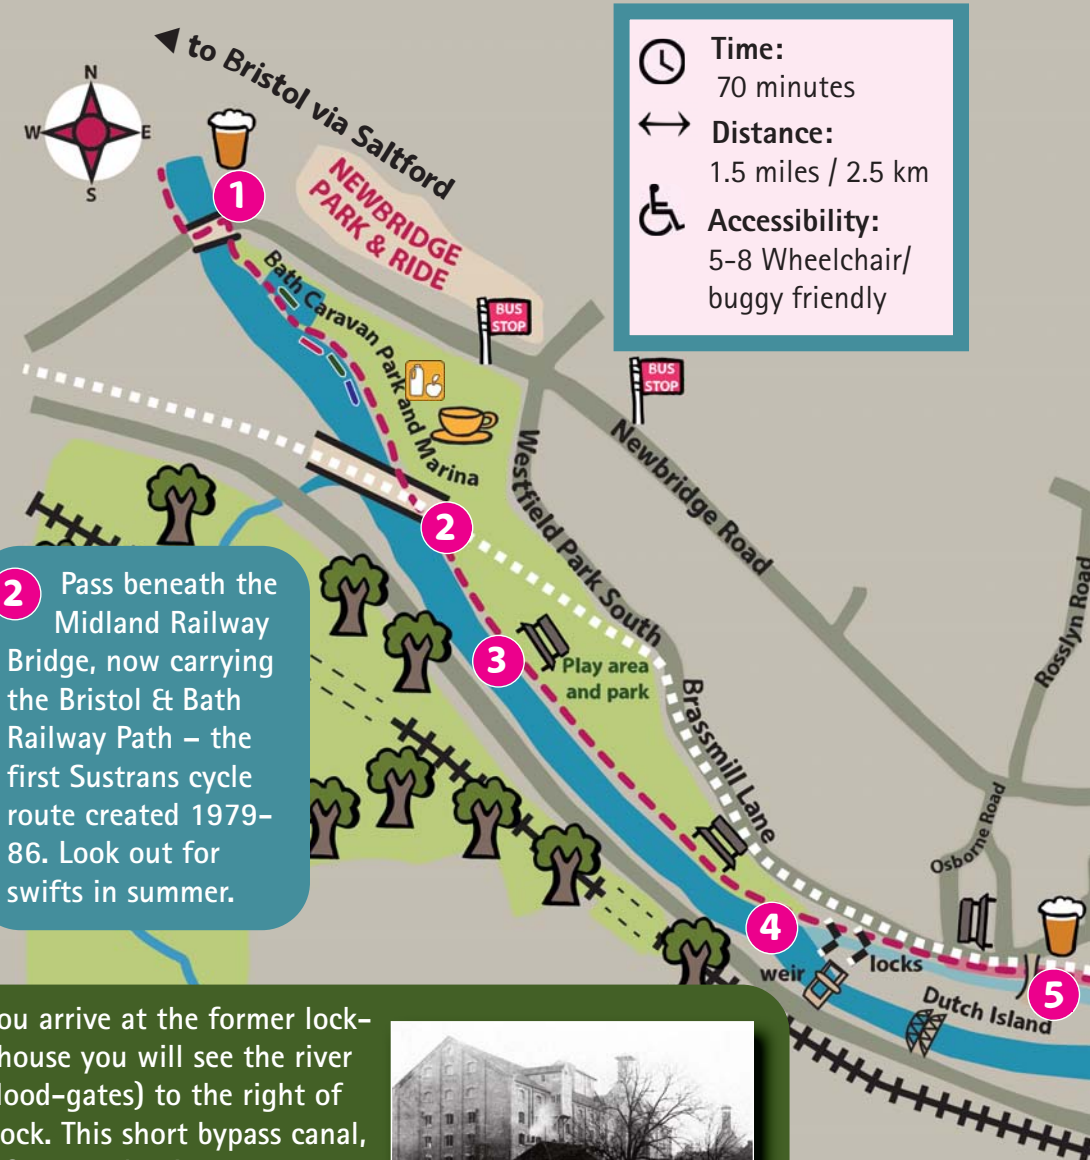

2 Pass beneath the Midland Railway Bridge, now carrying the Bristol & Bath Railway Path – the first Sustrans cycle route created 1979–86. Look out for swifts in summer.

4 Before you arrive at the former lock-keeper's house you will see the river weir (now flood-gates) to the right of the nearby lock. This short bypass canal, the Weston Cut was dug in 1727 to avoid the weirs of two large cloth mills opposite at Twerton and to allow boats to move goods along the river. See the rare Lodden pond weed in the water.

Halfway along the cut is the 'Dolphin' Bridge, leading to 'Dutch Island' where there was one of many local brass works. Just beyond, is the Locksbrook Inn, formerly the 18th century Dolphin Inn. Look out for mute swans and moorhens.

6

Weston Footbridge replaced an old rope ferry in 1900. Nearby is the listed Herman Miller cabinet-making works (1976 -77) – an early building by Nicholas Grimshaw and an example of the British Hi-tech movement – soon to be Bath Spa Arts Campus.

7

Pass under another Midland Railway into Bath. In warmer months, look out for damselflies and aquatic plants such as lilies and the yellow flag iris near the Kelson's Field Park, once the mouth of Lox Brook.

Arrive at the stone piers below the old Windsor Bridge. These are the remains of Twerton Suspension Bridge. Leave by the sloping slipway. Follow the towpath upstream to the city. Look out for kingfishers.
