Places to play in Bath and North East Somerset

Visiting parks and outdoor spaces like woodlands is a great way to enjoy family time together. We’re very lucky to have so many parks and green spaces in Bath and North East Somerset. This leaflet and map shows just some places that you can go and play that are completely free to use. There is almost certainly one near your home.

Getting out of the house and playing outside in the fresh air is a great way for us all to stay healthy, discover nature, develop a sense of adventure and make new friends.

Why not find out as a family what parks and places to play there are near you? Follow your public footpaths to see what’s out there. Or you can ask around, put your postcode into the Council website (www.bathnes.gov.uk), or call the Family Information Service (contact details are on the back page). You might be surprised how many places there are that you can use to play in.
Play Rangers

Bath & North East Somerset Council funds Community Play Rangers to work in parks across the area. They run fun activities that encourage children to make the most of parks and open spaces, and to enjoy playing in a safe environment.

Some parents feel happier letting their children out to play if they know there are supportive adults around.

You can find out more by contacting the Family Information Service (see back page).

Deta Gottschling from Shoscombe and his wife Libby have six children aged between 7 and 19 – five boys and one girl.

“My time with my family is precious - I always try to find the time to do as much as I can with my children on my days and evenings off.

We enjoy playing outdoors and we use the park in Radstock because we can walk there along the cycle path from Shoscombe. We often go out for the day with a picnic and we also go fishing as a family, sometimes to Avoncliff.”
Olivia Bird and her husband Nick live in Larkhall, Bath, with their two children, Matthew, aged ten, and eight-year-old Leon.

“We’re very lucky to live in the area that we do – there is such a wide variety of open places for the children to play and explore. We’re really lucky as our house backs on to a playing field and I love the fact that they can just go out and have unstructured play. They meet up with other children in the area and make up games, without adult intervention – something that is vital in developing their imaginations and inventiveness.

We use Alice Park a lot as it is just a five minute walk away for us. It’s a great family park with loads to do; it has a playground and a sandpit, which my boys loved when they were little. There’s a café, tennis courts and best of all a pond – great for catching, studying (and then releasing!) tadpoles in the spring/summer. It’s also the place where my boys like to play football and cricket.

We also use Victoria Park – my boys love the long enclosed silver slide and the zip wire – and Alexandra Park because I love the views!

Henrietta Park is very pretty and peaceful. Leon learnt to ride his bike here; sadly Matthew is yet to learn to ride a bike as he has special needs and can sometimes have problems with his balance and co-ordination, and so, although Bath has lots of lovely places to ride bikes, it’s not something we do as a family yet.”
Play is for everyone

Finding places outdoors to relax and play can be tricky for some families, especially if they have children with special needs. Bath and North East Somerset Council funds two Family Play Inclusion Workers to support school aged children who need help or even just a confidence boost to get out and play. James Beattie is the Family Play Inclusion Worker for Bath Area Play Project, based at Odd Down Community Centre in Bath.

“I work with children who aren’t, for whatever reason, playing, or have little opportunity for different types of play. It may be that they have low self-confidence, a physical disability or additional needs. I help families to overcome these barriers and get families playing together.

Play is vital to the happiness and development of children, it is how they learn and without it there are fundamental gaps in their development.”

James is also a big fan of the Celebrating Fatherhood campaign, which is being run by the Council.

“Play is an area that dads are really good at and a way they can really help their children and have a lot of fun. There are lots of regular opportunities for play and outdoor activities aimed specifically at fathers and their children – that means dads, uncles, step dads, brothers and grandfathers – across the area.”

The Council also runs a Wheels for All scheme which makes cycling accessible and available to children and adults who may not be able to ride a conventional cycle. A selection of tricycles, hand cycles and easy to balance scooters are available through the scheme. Contact the Family Information Service to find out more (see back page).
Sophie and Simon West live in Midsomer Norton and have three boys: George, ten; Henry, seven; and Jonti, aged three.

“Going outside to play as a family is so important. Our three boys really need open spaces to run and jump and have fun,” says Sophie.

“We use the Adventure Play Park in Midsomer Norton, which has plenty to entertain all three, despite the age range. There’s so much to do there.

“If we want to go somewhere quieter we go to the park in Wellow – I think that’s my favourite park. I often meet friends there. We take a flask and can sit and chat, while the older boys use the playing fields and Jonti plays on the smaller play equipment. The way it’s designed is so child-friendly – it means the children can play independently and do their own thing, which I think is really important.

“We also use Alice Park on the London Road in Bath sometimes; again this is great because parents can sit and have a coffee whilst the children can run around and have fun with other children.”
Things you could do with your family in the park:

Make a den
Have a picnic
Play hide and seek
Throw a frisbee
Collect leaves
Run your own Olympic games
Make new friends
Get muddy
Pretend you’re a superhero and act out an adventure
Make a daisy chain
Fly a kite
Look for animal tracks
Play tag
Hold a treasure hunt

What else would you do?

Jim Phillips lives in Weston in Bath with his wife Rachel and two daughters, Mali, who’s almost one, and Mair who is two.

“Spending time playing with my daughters is so important. We usually go to our local park off Broadmoor Lane but we also use the Royal Victoria Park in Bath. Mair and Mali both like the swings and Mair loves the slide.”
We would love to hear what you think

There are hundreds of parks and green spaces in Bath and North East Somerset and we can’t include them all, but we hope you find this leaflet useful and that it gives you some ideas for playing outside and places to go.

We’d like to know what you think of this leaflet. If you have any comments or suggestions to make it better please contact PlayOut_HangOut@bathnes.gov.uk or telephone 01225 396240

Bath & North East Somerset Council looks after around 70 parks across the area; others are looked after by local parish councils, and some by Curo (formerly Somer Community Housing Trust). There are also areas looked after by the Woodland Trust, the National Trust, and many other organisations, that are free to use.

Hopefully most people will be able to walk or cycle to their local parks but most of the sites have street parking nearby.

Please keep your dog out of fenced play areas and away from play equipment. There are many other open spaces and parks where dogs can be exercised (please remember to clean up after them). Please also remember some people, especially children, can be scared of dogs, even friendly ones.

If you want to know more about play and parks in your area, please contact Bath & North East Somerset Council’s Family Information Service on 0800 073 1214, fis@bathnes.gov.uk or visit www.bathnes.gov.uk/fis

This leaflet about play and parks in Bath and North East Somerset can be made available in a range of community languages, large print, Braille, on tape, electronic and accessible formats from the Family Information Service.
