Charity Shop Research Findings – Charities Aid Foundation	The majority of people favour filling up empty high street shops with pop up charity or community stores until a permanent use is found, according to a Charities Aid Foundation survey. CAF's survey found that found seven in 10 people in the UK favoured this approach, with 78% of people wanting empty high street shops to be filled

	as soon as possible, rising to 87% of those aged 65+. The survey also revealed that 37% of people aged 16 and above regularly shop in their local charity shop, and 62% of those polled believe charity shops provide a valuable service on their local high street, rising to 66% of women. CAF cites a number of examples, including ‘Pop Brixton’ in South London, which is a partnership between locals and Lambeth Council that will run until 2020 and has transformed a disused plot of land into a space for local businesses to set up shop and share ideas. Members invest time into charitable and community projects such as children’s art classes and horticulture training. Last year, Harrods also opened a pop-up charity shop for a month in aid of NSPCC, while M Restaurants launched a pop-up dining event at its Victoria branch that donated 100% of the profits to the charity Not For Sale. Commenting on the findings, Susan Pinkney, Head of Research at the Charities Aid Foundation said: “Charity shops have thrived in the UK for generations, which is no great surprise considering just how supportive most people are of charities in this country. It’s amazing to see that over 20 million British people regularly pop to a charity shop, and clearly there is an appetite to see empty shops used in a way that supports the local community.” “Everyone wants to see our high streets thrive, and charity and community shops can be a great way to offer a valuable service while keeping our town centres bustling with activity.” YouGov surveyed 1,176 adults aged 16+ online between 18th – 28th January this year for the study.

UK organisations are eligible to apply if their annual income is between £250,000 and £10 million. Comic Relief is particularly interested in work that: Adopts the principles of children’s rights to survive and thrive, leaving no child behind, and supporting child-centred and family-centred care and nurturing; and Uses a participatory approach at all project stages and values the experience and insights of people who are directly affected by factors that impede early childhood development, including parents, family members and other carers, and communities. Depending on the age group, this can also include children’s views; for example, through child-to-child approaches. Comic Relief will make investments of up to £150,000 in the UK and up to £300,000 in Kenya and Malawi for 3 to 5 years. The investments may be higher for organisations that will both deliver strong community-level efforts and also contribute to strategic changes. Comic Relief’s investment can be used to cover

The technology may be simple or cutting edge. The funding is for new products and services that can be shared with the wider not-for-profit sector. It is anticipated that most applicants will already have a digital development partner on board when they apply to help them deliver their project. Projects should address one of four core issues: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Children Survive and Thrive</li> <li>• Global Mental Health Matters</li> <li>• Fighting for Gender Justice</li> <li>• A Safe Place to Be</li> </ul>	25 th March 2019

			Comic Relief is also looking for applications that address challenges around disability and inclusion. A wide range of digital initiatives that could lead to social change will be considered for the programme, but Comic Relief's aim is to fund projects that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Are focused on specific user needs in their design, delivery and development</li> <li>• Make best use of web, mobile apps or internet based technologies to deliver a service</li> <li>• Can scale effectively and offer economies of scale</li> <li>• Disrupt and challenge existing ways of delivering services</li> <li>• Are shareable with other parts of the not-for-profit sector</li> </ul> Applicants need to show that they understand how to manage a successful digital project, and that they have sound technical expertise in their management and delivery team. It is expected that some development work will already have taken place. A budget of £2.4 million has been established for the period 2019 to 2021. Not-for-profit organisations based in and delivering services in the UK may apply for a grant of up to £48,000. It is expected that 13 projects will be funded in the first round.

Young people will be encouraged to stay with host families abroad where possible, maximising their opportunity to practise language skills and be fully immersed in another culture. The fund will open to applications later this year, but schools can register their interest in the programme on the on the British Council website

Frederick Sharpe died in February 1976 and his Will provided a sum of money and nominated a group of Trustees (the "Sharpe Trustees") to hold and use the capital and income "in their sole discretion for the maintenance, repair, and restoration of Church Bells situate anywhere in England and Wales". The first grant awarded from Trust funds was paid in 1982. Since then, over £100,000 has been made available for bell restoration work. Grants have ranged between £50 and £500, the average being approximately £150.	Ongoing

Reading the Funding Guidelines: Why You Don't and Why You Should - Advice from Emma Beeston

Ask any funder their top reason for turning down an application and they will say “because the applicant did not read the guidance”. This has sadly been the case for the many years, despite all the training sessions and guides out there for fundraisers. Which begs the question: why don't people read the guidance? Or if they do read it, why do they go ahead and apply anyway even though they don't fit with the criteria.

These are the 7 reasons I have come up with. They fall into three categories: one is excusable once; three are operational and the final three relate to a mindset.

Not found: People don't always know to look for any guidance. If someone is new to bid writing, then this is fair enough. Hopefully this will be pointed out to them early on and then there is no excuse for making this mistake twice.

Unclear: People can struggle with reading and so it is up to funders to help with this – after all they are trying to fund work that achieves social change not testing literacy. The guidance is not always clear or consistent and can be jargon-rich.

Some funders help by being available to talk to potential applicants or using films and webinars to explain their criteria and funding process.

Too tedious: Reading lists of we do fund ... and we don't fund ... do not make for riveting reading. WikiHow has a whole list of ways to tackle boring books aAnd whilst I find their line "think of getting through a boring book as training for life" an incredibly depressing thought, the suggestions they have to take breaks, read away from interruptions, when most awake etc. are all useful.

Too time consuming: Of course, everyone is busy and finding time to read is hard. But this is a classic case of spend time now to save it later. You will save yourself an awful lot of wasted effort if you find out that you are not eligible and there is no point applying.

Disregarded: Treating applications as the end goal can be perpetuated by actual targets set for fundraisers for applications made. Or it can come from the sense that the Trustees and others will judge you if you have not populated a pipeline with many bids. The focus should always be on being effective – so your applications have a good chance of success – and not just volume.

Overlooked: The complacency effect happens where you think you know the guidance already or that you were funded before so must still fit. This can be a mistake where criteria and priorities have changed.

Ignored: Fundraisers are usually wonderfully optimistic and resilient souls and so hope sometimes wins over judgment. There is a danger of putting in a speculative application just in case it might be considered and in other cases, passion clouds reality. Because the bid writer is so excited about their work and the difference it makes, they assume that funders will be equally blown away and will make an exception. If you think this applies to you, try a phone call – but only after you've read the guidance.

Whatever the reason, the advice remains the same – before spending time on writing a bid, you must read the guidance and if you don't fit with the criteria, don't just go ahead and apply anyway. Put your precious time into another application, where you have a much better chance of being funded.

Midsomer Norton Men's Shed	The Midsomer Men's Shed Project, part of Midsomer Norton Community Trust, launched on 1st June 2018. "The Shed will provide a place for men and women to come together where they can work on their own or community DIY projects – anything from making a garden planter to repairing a chair. As much as the work in hand, it's being together – working shoulder to shoulder and enjoying the company of others", said Richard Jordan, Community Trust Trustee for the Men's Shed Project. The Men's Shed concept started in Australia where they have been amazingly successful over the last 12 years – to the point where there are 900 sheds across the country. The Australian government has recognised the mental health benefits of Men's Sheds and now provide them with funding from the savings made from the reduced calls on their health service. Men's Sheds are now setting up all over the UK and as such it's great to see that once again our area is at the cutting edge. Membership is open to anyone over the age of 18 and costs £5.00 per annum and £3.00 per visit to the shed. Social Prescribing – Just Do It - An Article from Clarity 'CIC'	Social prescribing, essentially enabling people to find and use support services in their community that will improve their health and wellbeing, should be going mainstream. It seems to me blindingly obvious that such an approach is a good thing. But much more importantly, there is now considerable evidence that it works. Take a look at the articles on social prescribing on the Healthy London Partnership	https://wiki.healthy london.org/Social_Prescribing https://www.kingsfund.org.uk/publications/social-prescribing

NHS and the King's Fund websites (links below). The evidence shows it works for patients, carers and their families and it works for the system. That is, it can save money by reducing hospital admissions and enabling people to stay healthier and independent for longer.

It is not difficult to see the logic. The benefits of getting more people to use services that already have a well evidenced track record – be it in mental health, physical fitness, housing, debt management and reducing loneliness doesn't require a great leap of faith. And yet we are still seeing a lot of effort, and money, going into further research, scoping, modelling and business cases.

At the end of last year two next door areas in the South West received separate Life Chances Fund development grants (now closed to Expressions of Interest) to work up proposals for social prescribing in their areas. Thank goodness they are collaborating and I know every area is different (to an extent). But isn't about time that the money that is available focussed on putting social prescribing into practice? I suspect it is endemic across our culture but there really does seem to be a prevailing "not evidenced here" syndrome.

OK, in many ways Rotherham (a well-recognised social prescribing case study) is very different to, say, Devon. But in both areas: people go to their GP; GPs are generally not well equipped to help people access local support services; the health and care system is under massive financial pressure; and there is a common desire to help people stay healthier and more independent for longer.

Of course, the way social prescribing is delivered and how it builds on existing practice and provision will need to be designed to meet local circumstances.

But the overall concept is clear, simple and should now be universal. Simon Stevens and Jeremy Hunt need to use their financial and policy levers to make it happen.

Lloyds Bank launches £500 million Growth Fund	Lloyds Banking Group has opened a £500 million pound loan fund to help British businesses finance equipment. Essentially, this is the same £500 million scheme the bank opened a couple of years ago for the agricultural sector, but now its remit has been widened to include manufacturing, construction and transport. The scheme targets small and medium-sized companies which banks froze out of credit following the financial crisis. The bank said the fund will deliver quick access to finance by allowing companies to spread the cost of assets over their lifetime, enabling big investments that don't eat into working capital. The government sees small and medium-sized companies as key to unlocking higher productivity, which has fallen back to below pre-crisis levels this year, and to the success of the UK economy post-Brexit. These businesses have struggled to invest in the decade since the financial crisis as banks have shied away from lending to smaller businesses.	Interested parties can phone either of the Bank's two 24-hour helpline/contact numbers: 0345 300 0000 or 01733 347 007. Research on mental health and social relationships	Mental illness has huge cost implications for society and the NHS in terms of lost work days and healthcare. Research into the health effect of social networks and interaction could inform cost-efficient mental health initiatives and policies.	http://www.esrc.ac.uk/news-events-and-publications/evidence-

	Depression, anxiety and other psychological conditions cost the UK an estimated £77 billion a year. Experts predict that by 2020 depression will be second only to heart disease as an international health problem. Social isolation has long been known as a key trigger for mental illness, while supportive relationships with friends, family and neighbours are beneficial to the mental health of individuals and the population. Other forms of social interaction such as volunteering are also known to boost wellbeing. People with supportive friends and family generally have better mental and physical health than those who lack these networks. The same is true for those who take part in churches, clubs and voluntary organisations. It is only by analysing people’s lives over time within a structural, social and cultural context that we can establish whether social relationships really do contribute to better health and increased wellbeing – or whether better health and more energy in the first place enable people to invest in relationships with family and friends. Researchers at the ESRC-funded International Centre for Lifecourse Studies In Society and Health have examined how social networks have a positive psychological impact. Attachment theory suggests that people with secure childhoods may be better at relationships of any kind – for instance making friends at school and work, or getting on well with neighbours. This theory can only be tested by looking at information over the span of a person’s life, preferably from birth to old age. For further information and key findings, see the website to the right.	briefings/mental-health-and-social-relationships/
Fundraising Advice – Hold a Fast Party	The idea behind a Fast Party is not to plough through the buffet at a party as quickly as possible, but to ‘fast’ – as in abstaining from eating. A Fast Party is actually a non-event, whereby people are invited to a party that isn’t going to take place. This type of fundraiser works particularly well with well-known charitable organisations with a strong supporter base either locally or nationally. Guests are asked to go without one meal on a specific date and to contribute the money that would otherwise be spend on the meal to your not-for-profit. The advantage of this fundraising idea is that it:

- Requires very little organising
- Doesn't require a venue
- Has very little financial outlay – all you're paying for is the cost of the invitations (and you could get a sponsor for this in return for a bit of advertising)
- Can be quite easy to obtain sponsorship.

Disadvantages are relatively few. The main drawback is that supporters who may already be contributing to the charity or cause may feel 'put upon' by another request for help.

It's also a fundraising idea you should be wary of overusing. It's okay as a witty, fun one-off activity, but at best this should be an annual event and possibly take place even less frequently.

To organise a Fast Party, find a couple or several friends to help write a Guest List and put together an eye-catching, well-designed and witty invitation (for example, 'Mr and Mrs Smith have pleasure in not requesting your company.....' or 'Guests of Honour will not include...').

You could also print an unappetising menu on the back of the invitation to show 'participants' that they've had a lucky escape. Include a vegetarian option.

Print the invitations on good quality card and include a self-addressed envelope or set up an online payment system so that participants can make their financial contribution easily – or you could just pop round to a supporters' house to collect their donation.

Make sure that cheques are made out to the charity or cause rather than to an individual, which could lead you open to criticism or, worse, accusations of fraud.

Tickets to the party could be £5 per person, £8 per couple or £10 per family, whatever you think is appropriate for your supporters.

The advantage for 'participants' is that they don't have to do anything to participate. A Fast Party enables them to show their support for a cause at a relatively low cost without having to spend much effort, plan, or use up valuable time and effort.

	In terms of return, most Fast Parties report at least 50% of invitees making a donation. Some may not wish to participate but may still be willing to make a donation. Finally, always send a short thank-you letter, telling donors how the funding will be used and the difference it will make!

Fundraising – Auctions of Promises	Auctions of Promises tend to be most successful when held on the back of another event when equipment and furniture is already available. A good Auction of Promises ( 50 lots takes about an hour to get through if you have a good auctioneer) can often raise £1,000 or more. An Auction of Promises is held on identical lines to a conventional auction, but the ‘lots’ are quite different. Each lot is a ‘Promise’, usually written on individual slips of paper and signed and dated by the person offering the promise. Promises are secured by asking around your contacts, private companies or prominent individuals in the community, such as the Mayor or your local MP. It’s a good idea to have a wide selection of lots, for example, handmade goods, offers of help, vouchers, special opportunities and donated items. Example of promises can include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Theatre tickets</li> <li>• Having your car(s) cleaned</li> <li>• A free round of golf</li> <li>• A week’s holiday in a country cottage or an apartment overseas</li> <li>• A free meal at a local restaurant</li> </ul> To organise an Auction of Promises, follow these steps: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Get together a small group of helpers or form a committee;</li> <li>2. Decide on a date and a venue and apply for an occasional licence if you intend to run a bar, which could usefully increase the amount of funding raised;</li> <li>3. Find an auctioneer who will ideally volunteer their time. If you can get one, a professional auctioneer will bring a sense of authenticity as well as ensuring the auction moves along at a brisk pace. If someone other than an experienced</li> </ol> auctioneer wants to do it. It's essential they have a presence;

4. Proactively seek donations and promises. Make sure you get specific commitments from people or companies. Type up the promises and get them signed before the donor can pull out! Make it clear the offer is available for a limited period only, for instance 6 months or a year.
5. Prepare a catalogue showing images and the running order of all the lots which can be shown online or handed out at the event. It can help if you publish a reserve price for each lot to give participants an idea of where to begin bidding.

To keep things interesting:

Include a Surprise Auction: keep 2-3 popular lots in unmarked envelopes. Announce that the next lot is one of the unmarked promises, but bidders won't know which one it is. Participants make 'blind bids' and the successful bidder receives a surprise (it's important not to announce the lots until all have been auctioned).

Include a Sealed Bid Auction: this is where you display the lots and make pens, papers and envelopes available. Bidders place their bids in sealed envelopes and place them in a box. The winners are announced at the end of the Promises Auction. It's worth bearing in mind that Sealed Bid Auctions don't generally raise as much funding.

At the end of the Auction, try to encourage all successful bidders to pay before they leave. Thank the auctioneer with a bottle of wine and flowers. Make sure you have sufficient volunteers to clear up. After the event, thank your donors, volunteers and successful bidders and let them know how much has been raised and how the funds will be used.

Ensure the Auction is reported in the local and social media (this can also be done in real-time during the event), together with the amount raised. An Auction of Promises is a great PR opportunity because you can gain additional publicity as people redeem their promises throughout the 6 months or year.

Finally, think about making it an annual event to develop your commercial and public

For example, a Community Garden project will get matched to a Green Space fund in the same way a playground in Manchester will get matched to Manchester funds. You can get your project matched, pitch your project to funds and attract additional support from partners to help bring your project to life. Study into what encourages people to give to charity and what puts people off (and other reports)	NFP Synergy released two reports recently looking at what encourages people to give to charity and what puts people off from giving. The top four factors that encourage people to give are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The charity is clear about what donations are spent on (56%);</li> <li>• Learning about the impact which the charity has (47%);</li> <li>• Positive stories about the charity in the media (37%);</li> <li>• Case stories/stories about individuals that have been helped (33%).</li> </ul> Different age groups tend to be motivated by different factors, so those over 55 years old are more likely to want the charity to be clear about what its donations are spent on, as well wanting more information about impact. In contrast people under the age of 35 want case stories much more than older groups (40%+ for the under 35s vs around 30% for the other age groups), as well as fundraising events to take part in, thank you’s, celebrity endorsements, and volunteering opportunities. All age groups want good stories in the media, and a strong media presence. Donors like to see great case studies and human stories – a clear mix of the information that motivates and inspires, and information that convinces them their donation isn’t being wasted. More interesting perhaps is how young people want more than other age groups: they wanted to be engaged as a whole supporter: to give and to volunteer, to take part and be thanked. WHAT PUTS PEOPLE OFF? The most significant factor that puts people off from giving to charity is the persistence and intrusiveness of fundraising. Irritation with fundraising rises steadily with age, peaking at the 55-64 year old age group. However fundraising is not the	https://nfpsynergy.net/free-reports-and-presentations

	main barrier to people giving. This remains 'too little money actually going to the cause' at 54%. The second highest factor that puts people off from giving is 'too much money spent on staff salaries' at 43%. The reports, along with many other useful resources, are available on NFP's website under the 'Free Resources' tab.
Cyber Attacks	The Charity Commission is urging charities to be 'vigilant' in protecting their organisation from ransomware attacks and to follow protection advice recently issued by the National Cyber Security Centre. Gift Aid	When people donate to a registered charity or a Community Amateur Sports Club	https://www.gov.uk/claim-gift-

(CASC), it's from an income they've usually already been taxed on. Charities can therefore reclaim the equivalent of the basic rate of tax, increasing the value of the donation made. For every £1 donated, the charity can claim an extra 25p, so each £1 can become £1.25 for the cause.

There are special rules for:

- Funds from sponsored challenges (for example: overseas treks or marathons);
- Charity membership fees;
- Church collections;
- Selling goods on behalf of individuals (for example through a charity shop);
- Charity events or to view charity property;
- Charity auctions;
- Volunteer expenses donated back to a charity or CASC; and
- Funds raised through charities involved in running schools

For your contribution to qualify for Gift Aid, you must pay enough UK tax to cover the amount the charity will reclaim. You'll also need to make a Gift Aid declaration if you want the organisation to make the claim, and many charities will include this on their donation forms.

The giver must confirm that this is a Gift Aid donation and that they have paid enough UK tax to cover the reclaimed amount.

You can make a declaration that covers an individual donation, contributions made during the previous six years and all future gifts to an organisation.

If you pay more than the basic rate of tax you can benefit from your donation as well.

Donors paying 40 per cent tax can claim back the remaining tax for themselves by requesting a P810 Tax Review, or adding it to a Self Assessment tax return.

Charity Reserves – building resilience	A review by the Charity Commission has shown that less than a quarter of larger charities accurately reported the level of financial reserves they hold in their trustees' annual report. According to the Commission, its findings suggest an incomplete understanding of what reserves are, which it says could lead trustees to make poor decisions about their charity's finances. All registered charities must explain their policy on reserves in their trustees' annual report, and should state the level of reserves held as well as why they are held. Almost all of a sample of 106 charities with an income over £500,000 included at least a reference to their reserves policy in their annual report. However, less than a quarter gave the right reserves figure, based on the information in their accounts. A third of charities failed to include a figure at all, while many trustees appear to believe that reserves are the same thing as total unrestricted funds. Sarah Atkinson, Director of Policy, Planning and Communications at the Charity	https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/charities-and-reserves-cc19

	Commission said: “The public, who generously donate to charity, rightly hold charities to high standards and expect them to manage funds in a way that maximises their benefit to society. As regulator, we therefore expect charities to steward their resources effectively; to protect their charity’s future and safeguard the money donated to them by the public or through public funds. Reporting financial information accurately is an essential part of this responsibility, so it’s concerning that so few larger charities appear to fully understand what reserves are or how to disclose them correctly. We would also expect auditors and independent examiners to report any concerns they have about the reserves held by charities, especially in light of the collapse of Kids Company.” As well as the report, the Commission has also published guidance to help charities understand what reserves are and how to develop and report on a reserves policy. It will be sending these to all charities in the sample where there were concerns over the absence or accuracy of the reserves figure in their annual reports.
Charity Checkout Fundraising Tool	Charity Checkout is a social enterprise that provides online fundraising tools for charities. If you’re looking for local grant-making trusts have a look at its Charity Directory. The directory lists registered charities under their county and town headings and the list includes plenty of grant-making trusts. You should be able to access further information on any of the charities listed on the Charity Commission website.	https://www.charitycheckout.co.uk/charity-directory/
Charities, Digital Technology and Young People	Charities are failing to use digital technology effectively to help disadvantaged young people, according to a recent report by the think tank NPC. “My Best Life: Priorities for Digital Technology in the Youth Sector” says that many charities using digital technology do not consider the circumstances many disadvantaged people face. The 31-page report is based on 12 months of research with young people experiencing multiple disadvantages in the London borough of Camden. The young people were asked how digital technology could be used to tackle the	https://www.thinknpc.org/publications/my-best-life-priorities-for-digital-technology-in-the-youth-sector/

	challenges and opportunities they faced in building better lives for themselves. Common problems were low levels of digital literacy outside social media, insufficient resources to pay for devices except mobile phones and the cost of data on phones. The proposals in the report include developing an app similar to Google Maps that would allow disadvantaged young people to find and review the local support they require, such as mental health services. The report also suggests using chat bots on phones to enable young people to ask questions about simple day-to-day support on issues such as benefits and housing.
goDonate	A new digital platform aims to help smaller charities increase the number of donations they receive online with a more simplified donation system. Billed at the ‘next generation donation platform’, goDonate has been designed to improve the online experience for donors and increase the chances of supporters completing the donation process. The number of fields donors have to fill has been reduced by including payment technologies such as Apple Pay, Google Pay and PayPal, with the information pulled from their digital wallets used elsewhere. Vicky Reeves, managing director of creators, Addition, said there was a “misconception” within the sector that supporters would complete a donation when they visited a charity’s website with the intention of donating. “Statistics show that a significant number of potential donors do not go on to donate,” Reeves said. “They can be put off by a poor user experience, having to complete lengthy forms or having security concerns about submitting their details.” She said that by creating a user-friendly platform these issues had been addressed. “If donors are using payment technologies such as Apple Pay, they will need to complete only the donation amount – if that is not already pre-populated – a consent statement and the Gift Aid declaration,” Reeves said. “So there will be no need for name, address, bank details and so on because those are already known. This reduces the donation process to within three seconds.”	https://addition.london/Products/GoDonate

	Addition created the system after the success of its Enterprise platform, designed for larger charities such as the NSPCC, the Stroke Association and the Alzheimer’s Society. Smaller and medium-sized organisations had expressed interest in a similar system that wouldn’t be as expensive to install. The Fire Fighters Charity began using goDonate at the beginning of March, since when its number of monthly donations has increased by 49 per cent.
Free guide for Charities on Cyber Crime	A guide aimed at helping charities defend digital risk has been published by the specialist insurer Ecclesiastical and the Charities Security Forum. The free Charity Cyber Guide provides organisations with information on the range of cyber threats they could face, from ransomware, malware and denial of service to phishing, password attacks and human error. It also offers practical advice on mitigating such risks, including guidance on protection against data breaches. The new guide has been put together after research by the insurer that found 17% of charities had experienced cyber attacks, with ransomware top of the list. 63% expressed concern about cyber and internet crime. Ecclesiastical’s charity director, David Britton, said: “After several years of high-profile attacks on larger corporations and businesses, there is now a growing trend of cyber attackers turning their attention towards organisations that might have a lower level of cyber security, including charities. “It’s clear from our research that even the threat of an attack is acting as a barrier to some charities innovating, and there’s a growing recognition that the long-term reputational damage to the charity and its trustees can be just as serious as the initial loss of data and the costs of putting things right.”	https://www.ecclesiastical.com/images/charity-cyber-guide.pdf
Legacy Fundraising	Legacies can be a challenging area for charitable organisations because it can be a difficult and sensitive issue to broach, yet legacies are generally the biggest gifts received by charities from individuals.	www.RememberaCharity.org.uk

Gifts in wills are now estimated to be worth £2.8bn a year to UK charities, with the average residual bequest standing at £46,000, according to Legacy Foresight's latest Legacy Giving report. This represents by far the largest source of voluntary income to the sector.

Nearly 16% of all charitable legacies are left to animal charities. The Code of Fundraising Practice and its associated Rulebooks for Street, Door and Private Site Fundraising outline the standards expected of all charitable fundraising organisations across the UK. The Code sets out the law and best practice for a range of fundraising techniques.

The standards were developed by the fundraising community through the work of the Institute of Fundraising (IoF) and Public Fundraising Association (PFRA), which has now merged with the Institute of Fundraising.

The Legacies section of the Code and Legacy Fundraising guidance establishes a series of criteria to be observed by charities to ensure that legacy fundraising is undertaken in a professional, responsible and sensitive manner.

Remember A Charity is a consortium of over 140 charities which promote legacy giving. Based at the Institute of Fundraising, the group encourage more people to leave gifts to charity in their Will, after looking after their friends and family.

The Institute of Fundraising website has a useful video of an Introduction to Legacy Fundraising, which is free to view.

Remember a Charity offers the following 10 useful tips for effective legacy fundraising. Further information is available on the Remember a Charity website.

1. Be proud of legacies – a legacy may be seen as reflection of someone's life, values and experiences.
2. Family first – for many people with children, the idea of leaving money to charity could be seen as disinheriting your family. So it is important to use 'family first' messaging to overcome this barrier, such as 'after providing for your loved ones, please consider leaving us a share of what is left'.

3. Drip the message – legacy giving should be seen as a normal act, not as a taboo. It should be part of everyday supporter conversations.
4. Know your audience – think carefully about the groups that are most likely to want to leave a gift to your cause. The more specific you can be the better. This allows you to define your audiences, understand their motivations and target them accordingly.
5. Know your story – you need to be able to explain the difference their gift will make. You are asking people to leave a gift that will achieve something big in the future, and you should be able to communicate your legacy message simply.
6. A conversation works best – Research from Remember a Charity shows that if you spend just 45 minutes talking to each of your donors they will actively consider leaving you a gift.
7. Make it easy – one of the inherent problems with legacy fundraising is that making a Will is something we love to put off. So it is important to make it as easy as possible for people to make a Will and leave you a legacy. Consider your website – how is it easy to find your legacy pages or download a copy of your brochure?
  7. Use the right language – it can more accessible to talk about 'gifts in Wills'. Be clear what you mean and avoid jargon (the Institute of Fundraising, from which much of this article is sourced, has produced a jargon-busting briefing to help organisations get to terms with the language of legacy fundraising).
  8. Measure what you do – Remember A Charity suggests measuring the volume of your communications, the feedback you receive and the numbers of legacies per year.

	9. Look after your supporters – the simplest piece of advice is to treat your supporters well. The warmer they feel about you and the longer the relationship, the more likely they are to consider leaving you a gift.
Cyber Security of Charities	The National Centre for Cyber Security (NCSC) has published an assessment of the cyber threats facing UK charities and a guide to help charities protect themselves against malicious cyber activity. The NCSC's Cyber Threat Assessment report has revealed reveals how charities' valuable funds, supporter details and information on beneficiaries are being targeted. The Small Charity Guide outlines easy and low-cost steps to protect from attacks. Charity Governance	Charity trustees need to be able to identify the critical issues – the charity's purposes and plans, its solvency, its resilience and quality of governance – and to be able to review these at regular intervals. The Charity Commission has designed these 15 questions to help charity trustees carry out such a review and decide what they need to focus on. The Commission has also included links to guidance that can help trustees access further information on a particular issue.	https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/charity-trustee-meetings-15-questions-you-should-ask/charity-trustee-meetings-15-questions-you-should-ask

It begins with a travel grant for you to spend up to two months overseas, researching innovative practice on a topic of your choice. This is not an academic study, it's a practical exploration of how things work in other countries, yielding global insights that can be brought back to the UK to influence change here.

On your return, you will be supported with advice and further funding to spread your findings locally or nationally, perhaps to set up a pilot project or new organisation, and to meet key players in your topic area.

A Fellowship is for life, and you will be able to join useful networks of other Churchill Fellows in your topic or locality. Online you will have your own page on their website which can be used to promote your findings and activities.

Applicants come from all backgrounds, ages and levels of experience. No qualifications are required. You will need some knowledge of your topic area but you do not need to be a field leader. ## Section T: Advice Relating to a No Deal Brexit (February 2019)

Advice Relating to a No Deal EU Exit
Data Protection in a No Deal EU Exit Scenario – advice from the Office for Civil Society	A no-deal scenario would impact how organisations ensure flows of data continue. It is important for organisations, as a priority, to review whether they would be affected. There is specific guidance on data protection in the event of a no deal. It is recommended that you review the government’s technical notice on data protection as well as guidance for organisations on data protection published by the Information Commissioner’s Office. In a no deal scenario, the continued free flow of personal data between the EU and the UK is not automatic and the guidance sets out the actions UK organisations should take to enable the continued flow of personal data between the UK and the EU. The Office for Civil Society are keen to understand how prepared civil society organisations are for the implications on data protection in a no deal scenario and what more Government can do to support the sector. DCMS has established a Economic Data Protection taskforce who would be happy to attend meetings with you and your members to assist with your preparations. If you would like to contact them to ask questions or raise any issues, please email laura.kennedy@culture.gov.uk

Settled Status Scheme – Advice from the Office for Civil Society	The government has committed to safeguarding the rights of EU nationals residing in the UK. EU citizens will be entitled to apply for ‘settled status’ in the UK, enabling them to continue to work and reside in Britain. The government has been clear that it will protect the rights of EU citizens in the UK, whether or not the UK reaches a final deal with the EU. For more information on immigration in the event of a no deal, please review the latest policy guidance, which has been recently published by the Home Office. The settled status scheme is open to some EU citizens and their family members now. The scheme will open fully by 30th March 2019. On 21st January the Prime Minister announced that there will be no fee when the scheme opens fully on 30th March 2019. The deadline for applying is 30th June 2021. The deadline for applying will be 31st December 2020 if the UK leaves the EU without a deal. For more information please review the Settled Status Scheme website. https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/eu-immigration-after-free-movement-ends-if-theres-no-deal/immigration-from-30-march-2019-if-there-is-no-deal https://www.gov.uk/settled-status-eu-citizens-families
EU Funding – Advice from the Office for Civil Society	Under the terms of the Withdrawal Agreement, UK entities' right to participate in EU programmes during the current Multiannual Financial Framework period will be unaffected. UK based organisations will be able to bid for funding, participate in and lead consortia, until programme closure in 2020. In 2016, the Chancellor announced that in the event of no deal the government will guarantee EU projects agreed before we leave the EU, to provide more certainty for UK organisations over the course of EU Exit. In July 2018, the Chief Secretary laid a Written Ministerial Statement extending this guarantee. The guarantee now

	covers the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• the full 2014-20 Multiannual Financial Framework allocation for structural and investment funds</li> <li>• the payment of awards where UK organisations successfully bid directly to the European Commission on a competitive basis while we remain in the EU</li> <li>• the payment of awards under successful bids where UK organisations are able to participate as a third country in competitive grant programmes from Exit day until the end of 2020</li> <li>• the current level of agricultural funding under CAP Pillar 1 until 2020.</li> </ul> For awards where UK organisations successfully bid directly to the European Commission on a competitive basis, the government will work with the Commission to ensure that UK organisations will be able to continue to participate. More information about the guarantee and funding for specific EU programmes is available in the technical notice on EU funded programmes. This includes the lead department and contact point for each individual EU programme. https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/the-governments-guarantee-for-eu-funded-programmes-if-theres-no-brexit-deal/the-governments-guarantee-for-eu-funded-programmes-if-theres-no-brexit-deal#after-29-march-2019-if-theres-no-deal
Erasmus+ and European Solidarity Corps - Updated Technical Notice – Advice from Office for Civil Society	The Government has issued an updated Technical Notice providing guidance to organisations and individuals on the UK’s anticipated participation in the current Erasmus+ (2014-2020) and European Solidarity Corps (ESC) (2018-2020) programmes after the UK leaves the EU. The government recommends that applications are submitted as normal for the upcoming deadlines for funding in respect of the 2019 Call for Proposals, for both Erasmus+ and the European Solidarity Corps (ESC). This will ensure that organisations and individuals can take part in the programme if a withdrawal agreement is in place. At the same time, organisations should take note of the scenarios outlined in the Technical Notice as part of their business planning. Please view the National Agency for more information. Both programmes offer fantastic opportunities for funding in the youth sector, and as delivering the deal negotiated with the EU remains the government’s top priority, we continue to encourage organisations to apply. https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/erasmus-in-the-uk-if-theres-no-brexit-deal/erasmus-in-the-uk-if-theres-no-
