Ceremony honours workers lost to war

Workers from Fry's who lost their lives in war were remembered at a moving ceremony in the grounds of the former chocolate factory.

Relatives of three of the workers were joined by residents of Somerdale, former Fry's employees, and other members of the community to pay tribute to the 165 people whose names appear on the war memorial at the site.

A cascade containing a poppy for each of those named was hung near the memorial alongside photos of 26 Fry's office staff who were among the 36 employees killed in the First World War.

The event was organised by former Fry's colleagues who wanted to commemorate the fallen workers even after the factory's closure and the ceremony included music by ex-factory employee Elsie Griffin and three poems.

Hugh Evans said: "We are really grateful for those who choose to use this space for their own personal remembrance. If there are 165 faces looking down from above saying thank you for remembering us, then we did our job."

"The pictures were used to represent that behind every name is a face and behind every face is a family story."

"Next year we will focus on the 29 employees killed in World War II, all from Somerdale, as remembrance moves to the 80th anniversary of the start of the war."
